Practically exploit the variety of trout lures

Even with a single species of fish like trout, many aspects come into play that are of great importance when choosing the right bait. Important factors for the fish's hunting behaviour are the time of year and the time of day you go trout area fishing. In the cold season, larger baits are more suitable, while in the breeding season you will often achieve better catching success with smaller baits.

With the fluctuations during the course of the day, the changing light conditions are particularly decisive for the hunting behaviour of the fish. Therefore, take advantage of the colour variety of the trout lures in the Starter Set at different times of the day. Hunting behaviour can also vary in different waters. If you are unsuccessful with one lure on a river, try the next and then the next. When trout area fishing in the lake, proceed in the same way.
